BACKGROUND:

Federal and state law requires group health insurance policies to cover expenses for treating chemical dependency (such as alcoholism) and mental health conditions (together referred to as behavioral health care) at the same level as other medical care, and entitles behavioral health care providers to reimbursement. Current law also prohibits insurers from discriminating against health care providers that are providing care within the scope of their license under a health benefit plan. However, many states implementing Medicaid expansion are experiencing difficulty achieving parity between different types of health care providers.

Senate Bill 860 requires the Department of Consumer and Business Services (DCBS) to investigate the parity of insurance reimbursements between "behavioral mental health providers," "medical providers," and mental health providers with prescribing privileges, including: historical trends for maximum reimbursements; parity between utilization management procedures reimbursements; parity for reimbursements for incremental increases to office visits; and parity of reimbursement calculation methodologies. The measure also requires DCBS to adopt rules fully implementing existing mental health parity and network adequacy statutes, including incorporating the findings of its investigation. Lastly, Senate Bill 860 directs DCBS to report its findings and adopted rules to the legislature's health care committees by September 1, 2018.
