

This is the story of Joshua who was born December 8, 2016.

Following the typical care that the mom and the baby receives at a hospital, Joshua was given the vitamin K injection and the Hepatitis B vaccine. After the vaccines, Joshua started breaking out with little bumps around his face and body. His face swell up to the point where his eyes were almost shut. His mom, Elizabeth, took him to the ER and the doctor told her he had dermatitis. She asked about the reaction she has seen on him after his vaccines and the doctor told her that the vaccine was not the cause. He referred her baby to a dermatologist and an allergist and where he was put on steroids. Steroids made it so much worse. He now suffers from allergies to eggs, wheat, milk, oats, tomatoes, some types of fruits, environmental allergies and asthma.

This is what Elizabeth says: “Joshua went through a big deal of consequences because of his reaction to his vaccines. I wish the professionals would have sat with me and explained that there was a possibility of all these reactions. But I was never made aware of anything before they put those vaccines in his body. Because where there is risk, as small as it may be, I must be at liberty to decide if I am willing to put my baby through it or not. Nobody else should decide for me! “
